

"Mark Twain."

The above gentleman, over whose works hundreds of thousands of people have laughed themselves sore, will appear at the City Opera House, in connection with Geo. W. Cable, on Tuesday evening, February 10th. We reproduce an extract from a highly reputable journal, the Boston Daily Evening Traveler, to show how these gentlemen were received at the "Hub":

"There could have been no further additions to the audience at Music Hall last evening without positive discomfort to those already within the doors. The names of Mark Twain (Samuel L. Clemens) and George W. Cable were of sufficient drawing power to bring together the largest kind of a company. The occasion was the simple announcement that Messrs. Clemens and Cable would give readings of their own works. And they did; and it was the funniest night that had been passed by the majority of the audience for a long time. The two entertaining gentlemen kept their auditors in an uproar pretty much all the while. It was either laughter or applause well-nigh continuously, sufficient silence being given only for the words. Among other thing, Cable responded to an encore by singing a Volk-song in a sweet tenor voice that won him much praise."
