

Mark Twain and George W. Cable.

The greatest success on the lecture platform this year has been the appearance of Mark Twain and George W. Cable together. Mark has never been here, and his name alone would attract a hall full. Mr. Cable has won world-wide renown by his remarkable character sketches in "Old Creole Days," and other later works, and wherever they have appeared the houses have been crowded. It will be a rare treat to see and hear these two distinguished wits.
