It was a happy inspiration on the part of the authors of "Dr. Sever" and "Huckleberry Finn" to come before the public with readings from these their latest books, and the enterprise has been welcomed by the public everywhere with such generous cordiality, that probably nobody feels quite so happy about it as the distinguished readers themselves. The size and quality of the audience gathere in the Opera House to hear them last evening JACOB ERRAT was certainly all that the entertainers, could desire, while the most of the performance was all that the entertained could wish, and therefore, when the gathering broke up, it could hardly have been otherwise than with entire satisaction all round. There is a peculiar fitness in the conjunction of these two literary constellations, because their talents on the platform are such as to afford contrast and emphasis the one to the other. Mr. Clemens is quiet and conversational in his manner, telling his story in a natural easy way, that is more auggestive of the smokingroom then the public hall while his companion in dramatic and into se to a degree. With Mr. Clemens there is no pretence of distanguishing between the different characters introduced by means of change in tone and manner. With Mr. Cable each character is made to stand out clear and distinct as in a drama, therefore in alternating with one another as they do at intervals of filteen minutes the very oppositoness of their style tends to heighten the effect and greatly increases the listener's enjoyof both. ment Clemens Mr. not confine himself to " Huckleberry Finn," but drew upon others of his works likewise, especially the veracious history of his travels lu Europe known as "A Tramp Abroad." Out of the kindness of his heart he also consented to throw in as an "extra" the pathelic story of the "Jumping Frog." He is an older man than we expected to so-, and both face and frame show signs of hard work, but he knows how to husband his resources, and is probably not half so tired by an evening's reading as he would by sitting out a dinner. In listening to him read you realize more fully than ever before the power of a single word. It was said that Garrick could move an audience to tears by the utterance of one word. Mr. Clemens certainly can move them to uncontrolled laughter by a single nunn or adjective.
